

STORY FROM THE FRONTLINES

Derm residents and faculty worked together to identify the best ways to serve our patients with skin disease as well as continue learning during the pandemic. We offered telehealth visits for patients and conducted our academics over Microsoft Teams. Last April, several of our residents and faculty took part in GME's Academic Boot Camp conducted by Dr. Brent Stansfield, and Lisa Bedford, Reema Habra, and Sarah Utz are working on a DART/DEFT quality improvement project to make adjustments to our academic lectures so that they offer an improved learning experience for second and third years. In addition, our residents took part in lectures put on live and virtually from the Society of Pediatric Dermatology on July 10-12. I participated as well, for CME credit. Residents will be discussing highlights of the meeting during our academic Wednesdays. The continuation of these important tasks kept some sense of normalcy and purpose in these difficult times. We spent time with our own families and took care of each other.

Geoffrey Potts, MD, FAAD

Assistant Professor and Associate Program Director

Dept. of Dermatology